Freight is being held one to two days for want of men and room to handle and bill it out, while the platform at train time is full to overflow. We ain't a kickin' but the Great Rock Island has got to be expanding and for expansion.

Good United States people roll their eyes in holy horror when they read about the free and easy manner in which dueling is practiced abroad, says the Washington Star. Just now they are in a tremor of indignation over the recent attack of the emperor of Russia, which was addressed to his army and navy officers, and informed them that they must recognize the necessity of fighting duels under certain circumstances. If these pious people were aware of how much real dueling occurs in the regular army which protects the dignity of the American flag they would begin to hold mass meetings.

While our army is not as large as those of other countries, its young officers are as quick and ready to accept an insult in the manner recognized by the code as any continental warrior of epaulettes in existence. And they do it, too. Affairs like the Money-fied-berg tragedy are, of course, uncommon, but any man well informed in the personnel of the army and the life at the various posts knows that there are many occasions when differences arise between officers which are not settled until the approved number of paces are measured off and the two principals in the difficulty take a shot or two at each other. There is never any fatal result, but there are many army officers in the service now who bear scars of wounds that were never inflicted in regular battle. Hospital reports of western army posts sometimes make an old-timer smile when they read how Lieut. This has a sprained leg or Capt. That had hurt his arm by a fall.
